

Text -out- loud challenge

Submitted by: Leah Boonin

Subject area ANY target age group 7-adult abstract Students are assigned roles for their participation in instances where English texts are read outloud in class. This helps students pay attention to the materials. One student is the reader, another is the questioner, another the answerer, another the summerizer.

materials English texts procedure

Students are assigned roles during the reading by their proximity to the reader. the roles are- reader, question maker, question answered, and summarizer. For instance, student one reads the text, student two must summarize it afterwards briefly to the class, and student three must come up with a question about the text to ask student four. For the next paragraph, everything shifts over one student. to include additional students, there can be more question formulators and answers.

questions to consider Which parts of the text did the students tend to focus their summaries and questions on? (this is a good indication of what may intrest them)

comments and feedback:

bibliography/additional resources: none